Coffee and Climate Adaptation

Su-re.coffee is more than just coffee. It is an output of scientific research to find a solution on climate change adaptation and mitigation through empowering local farmers and renewable energy development.

How can a cup of coffee have that kind of meaning?

25% of sales are contributed to biogas development and installation as well as climate education for local farmers.

su-re.coffee is produced by farmers in Bajawa, Flores where coffee becomes a valuable commodity. To enhance their capacity in adapting to climate change, Climate Field Schools were conducted.

Albertus, who is leading the secondary cooperative in Bajawa, has benefited from the climate education provided by BMKG in collaboration with su-re.co through Climate Field School. He said that after joining the Climate Field School, they are able to manage the coffee farming and processing better.

"By using the regular climate information given to us, we are able to adapt to climate change by making a better plan for planting our coffee and other alternative plants in our farm", said Albertus.
